IMPOSING BEAUTY

As the powerhouse Russian duo have showcased time and again, it takes more class to be a Czar-in-the-making than branded labels as they impress with this opulent villa.

Despite being easy on the eye, Oleg and Anna had a real architectural feat as their design backgrounds overcame tribulations to produce a home interior worthy of a motion picture live footage. This residence was made to last and it's up to its inhabitants to ensure the longevity of the pieces as it requires not only optimal upkeep but tender handling. The brightness of the dining room and kitchen is courtesy of the four different types of marble flooring as its main light marble is Bianco Perline.

From all of this opulence, it wouldn't be a surprise if Oleg and Anna were to be hired to refresh five-star properties around the world, as they are more than well-equipped at transforming a private home into an exclusive refuge. While Oleg works with precision and clarity in a traditional style, Anna predicts upcoming trends, bringing a complex eclecticism to the classical format, resulting in a fusion of varying textures and shapes. This can be seen in the master bedroom where the Tigermoth chandelier hangs above a resplendent Eivtavonni bed.

The spaces for the en suite bathrooms have come to denote a mutual understanding with the time-honoured tradition of getting oneself ready: for the world, for the crowd and for humanity. If it weren't for these bespoke double-elevated washstanding vanity by Oleg Klodt Architecture & Design, the day would not jive. The mirrors alone evoke a sensual pleasure in readying oneself in an abyss of marble, onyx, steel, mother-of-pearl and wood finishes all intended as decorative elements in themselves.

What is a cloakroom to you might just be a wardrobe to another and in this instance, what the difference really is depends on the amount of personal accessories it holds. A cloakroom in this situation is meant for the finishing touches to an outfit while the latter provides more intimate items. Needless to say, Oleg and Anna have thought of both instances as the walk-in closets are worthy of a Disney coming-of-age medley.

For the privacy of the owners, Oleg and Anna designed a separate second house that double up as an entertainment hub if visitors seem to be dwindling. A perfect excuse to wind down by having a game with some friends or completing laps in the indoor pool - there's certainly something for someone here. With supporting beams that reinforce the ceiling, glamorous hints are prominent through the Corbett chandelier that sparkles against the casual setting - a reminder that Oleg and Anna have indeed struck gold. ✦
